Excerpt: . . . then the changes from cold to heat is more sudden. A covering of 2 or 3 inches of dry leaves, with a sprinkling of stable manure over, to keep them from blowing away, answers very well for herbaceous things; and for tender shrubs, a casing of cedar branches just close enough to shut out the rays of the sun, while inside of this casing some leaves ought to be put; but it is shade that is wanted, more than a dense heap to keep the cold out. As a general thing, cold frames do not receive enough of air during the winter months. On every fine day the sashes should be tilted up, or drawn down, and in very cold weather they require to be covered with mats, or shutters, while the sides should be protected, as high up as the sashes, with a thick bank of earth, leaves or stable manure. All bulbs of Gladiolus, Tiger-flowers, and Tuberoses, should be frequently examined during the winter, to keep them free from mould. It is necessary to have them in a dry temperate atmosphere. Remove from the cellar or cold frame to the greenhouse, all pots containing Hyacinths, Tulips, and c The different varieties of Crocus are pretty little things with which to adorn the parlor and conservatory; but above all, do not forget to take under cover a few pots of sweet-scented Violets.
